Content Index Video: homophones Leaf 1. S Watson Homonyms (e.g. fair as in pale, beautiful, equal, or festival) and homophones (such as fair with fare-like food or toll) often confuse students with disabilities and too often confuse adults. How many adults do you know who regularly confuse them out there and they are? Since we have become reliant on spell-checking, our computers may miss using the bug, which is an error that usually comes from using the wrong word form. These sheets actually focus on using homophones. In order to understand, we need to consider that . . . Homonyms are actually several meanings for a word that is written in the same way. Examples include treatment (the doctor treats the disease, but the dog likes to treat.) and turn around (turn or take a turn.) Homophons are words that sound the same but are written differently. They also have different meanings. These sheets deal with Homophones, even if they are labeled homonyms. The challenge is to make students aware of the differences. My predecessor said that these sheets teach homonyms. I disagree. They give students practice in determining the correct use, but students need to know what form matters. That's what you need to teach. Introduce pairs to the word card for a wall chart and perhaps later the word wall. Give a definition for each spelling. Then the students in pairs make a poster that uses a new sentence with each of the words in the word couple accompanied by photos. Example: Aloud/Allowed Aloud: When something is said or sounded in such a way that it can be heard. Allowed: When the action is allowed. Put your posters in pairs on the walls. Then use homophones in spelling tests or dictations. Have students use the words on the walls to remember the appropriate spelling of the words you use in tests or dictations. A sheet with pairs a and b (#9 reminds me that Sue is Canadian. S Watson PRINT PDF-lists 11-20 Leaf No 3. S Watson PRINT PDF-lists 11-20 Leaf No 4. S Watson PRINT PDF-lists 11-20 Leaf No 5.
