Demonstrative adjectives (this one, which) are used to indicate a specific noun or noun. In French, they have to agree with the noun by number and sometimes gender. A couple of exemples... Cet arbre est mignon. This tree is sweet. Ces montagnes sont hautes. Those mountains are high. Characteristics of demonstrative adjectives Used instead of an article, not with one placed directly in front of a noun or adjective + noun We agree with the shown name in the number, and sometimes gender Demonstrative adjective + nouns can be replaced by demonstrative pronoun French demonstrative adjectives this / yes these / they male ce ces masc + vowel ce ces ces feminine cette ces + There are three unique adjectives: Male: ce Male in front of vowel: cet Feminine: cette + When the singular demonstrative adjective precedes a male directory or adjective that begins with a vowel or h muet, cet is used to avoid pause – learn more. A couple of exemples... will homme cet homme this/that man will ancien château cet château this/that former château + There is only one plural demonstrative demonstrative Ces. Cettes doesn't exist, and neither do cets. A couple of exemples... ce ce femmes these/those women ces hommes these/those men French vs English French demonstrative adjectives makes no distinction between this and that – ce, cet and cette can mean any of them. Likewise, you can mean these or those. When you need to make a difference, you can attach the suffix to the noun: – ci = this or this – là = it or those Pair exemple... cette chaise-ci this chair ces chaises-là those chairs ls vais à cet hôtel-ci, pas à cette maison-là. I'm going to this hotel, not that house. Demonstrative adjective quizzes think you've got it? In this blog I will highlight some grammatical rules on French demonstrative adjectives. Previously, I feel it is important to make a small reminder of what are actually demonstrative adjectives in English and what is the difference between demonstrative adjectives and demonstrative pronouns. It can all be so confusing, we'd better be safe than sorry! Let's start a grammar party! Demonstrative adjectives in English There are four demonstrative adjectives in English: this one, that, er, they. That and that's a unique form of these and those. These are words that are used to highlight which person or thing is being referred to. That and they are used when talking about something relatively close. For example, I like this pair of shoes (this one here). I like these shoes. That's what they use when you're talking about something remote, something you can point to. For example, I prefer that pair of boots there. I prefer those boots there. The difference between demonstrative pronouns and demonstrative adjectives It is important to understand grammatical jargon and make a distinction between demonstrative pronouns (also called independent demonstrators) and demonstrative adjectives (also called demonstrative determinants). What exactly is a demonstrative adjective? The demonstrative adjective changes* nouns. This is also used to modify unique names, while they and they are used to modify plural names. For example, I enjoyed this book (this one modifies the book). She loves these earrings (they modify earrings). * The word that changes the denominator is called modifier. It is a word, phrase, or sentence that functions as an adjective or adverb to describe a word or more accurately meaning it. What's a demonstrative pronoun? Just like demonstrative adjectives, demonstrative pronouns are these, them, these and them. They are also used for the show people or things. However, they do not actually modify nouns. They replace other nouns and stand alone. They're used more as pronouns. For example, this is interesting. I prefer them. Does that make more sense? Brilliant. We can start studying French demonstrative adjectives now we know exactly what we're talking about! Demonstrative adjectives in French In French, demonstrative adjectives are called les adjectifs démonstratifs. They agree in number (singular or plural) and gender (feminine or masculine) with the name they introduce or modify. Unique example Translation Feminine Cette Cette soup est délicieuse. This soup is delicious. Male Cel/ Cet Ce garçon est coquin. Cet arbre est vieux. This boy is presumptuous. This tree is old. In the male unique form, you need to use cet if the next word begins with a vowel. This is to facilitate pronunciation thanks to the connection between t at the end of cet and vowel. Plural example Translation of a woman's Ces Ces dress sont belles. These dresses are beautiful. Male Ces Ces livres sont passionnants. These books are fascinating. In plural form, if the words that follow CES begin with a vowel or h, you need to make a connection between the CES and the vowel or h the following word. -ci and -là Just like in English, the French language distinguishes between things that are close and things that are further away. As I have already mentioned, this and this is used in English to determine something relatively close, and this and they are used to talk about something further. It's similar in French. Indeed, you would add a suffix after a modified sece when something is near and suffix -là when something is farther away. For example, Aimes-tu de ces chaussures-ci? Ou préfères-tu ces chaussures-là? Do you like these shoes (here)? Or do you prefer those shoes (there)? Let's practice a little bit to see if you understand this grammatical lesson correctly. Fill the void with the correct French demonstrative adjective (ce, cet, cette, ces). Then check your answers. Enzo, as-tu lu _____ livre? Noah, aimes-tu _____ baskets? Qui est _____ belle petite fille? Comment from appelle _____ homme? _____ chien est agressif! Answer 1.Enzo, as-tu lu livre? Noah, you're going to aimes baskets? Qui est cette belle petite fille? Comment from appelle cet homme? So here it is, a little grammatical lesson about demonstrative adjectives in French. I hope it was clear enough and you're rocking this grammatical rule now!
