Observing and arranging patterns, playing matching games, fiddling with pegs and boards, play dough, or sorting cereals are a few activities that help kids develop the foundation of problem solving, logical reasoning, innovating and demonstrating their unique perceptions. Representing their ‘out of the box’ ideas that are cultivated by solving sorting worksheets helps them to read and write in the future. When children can imagine and represent in a way that is meaningful to them, then half the battle is won! This signifies their successful migration to coherent speech and observation powers. Encourage kids to solve sorting worksheets and prep them up for their approaching years in kindergarten, primary school, and then the big race!
