Help students are learning to distinguish between fiction and nonfiction. Hello Friend! A lot has changed in the classroom since the implementation of the Common Core Standards. While I may not love all of the texts read in class were fiction. Now, the Common Core Standards aim for reading materials to be 50% fiction and 50% nonfiction. I love sharing informational texts with my students because it is an easy way for me to connect with them and share in their interests. There is great excitement in the air when together we can learn new information and build our background knowledge. to share with you the day-to-day details and resources I used to teach my nonfiction unit! So let's get started! How I Teach Fiction Vs. Non-Fiction I begin the unit I make sure my students turn and talk to a partner to explain how the text type. I then add these posters to our focus wall. Videos to Teach Fiction vs. Non-Fiction These videos are an engaging way to dive into the topic! Harry Kindergarten is always a favorite! This video has short clips of Happy Feet 2 and March of the Penguins- an engaging springboard to get students to differentiate fiction vs. nonfiction! [spacer height="20px"] How to Teach Non-Fiction Text Features On Day 2 my plan was to teach the features of nonfiction texts. I asked my students, "What are text features?" I looked out and saw blank stares... heard nothing but crickets....But don't worry, this actually excited me! I love when no one already knows what I am about to teach. Prior to this mini lesson I made this anchor chart with just the text features pasted on. I shrunk the posters down and printed 4 to a page. I did not prewrite the post-its on the poster, instead my students and I created the notes together as we discovered, discussed, and determined each text features pasted on. I shrunk the posters down and printed 4 to a page. I did not prewrite the post-its on the post-its o understand how they help us while reading nonfiction texts. I hung our anchor chart in a low space that was accessible to my students while working in the front of my classroom. I also printed the text feature posters out and put them on a ring. Comparing Fiction and Non-Fiction Now that my readers had a good foundation of identifying nonfiction books and text features, we moved on to comparing fiction to nonfiction texts. These two familiar books on butterflies were perfect to use as examples of each text type. In first grade students must be able to explain major differences between fiction and nonfiction texts. To support them I premade the beginning of our anchor chart to compare texts. As my students discovered the differences between the butterfly texts, we filled out the chart together. Get these FICTION VS NONFICTION printables here Later they sorted the attributes on their own chart. I used this printable in a literacy center. It also served as a great resource for having them share their thinking with a partner. This printable made a good assessment that I shared with parents at conferences. I recognize prepping these materials can take A LOT of time! That's why I've created resources to help you. These three resources for teaching about non-fiction are ready to print and teach!
